- ⑨ Preliminary to cleaning the Great Temple Building 500, I set men to work cleaning the low ground south of the Temple. Two trenches (or rather excavations) were put in one A near the pyramid, another B in the mass of postholes (see Feb. 8).

In trench A, there are fragments of walls on a distinct floor ①. These are partly red brick and resemble the walls of 100.
There is little pottery. In fact, I am greatly struck by the complete absence of antiquities (not only in the Py. chambers, but also) in the debris in the buildings.
In the W. end of Trench A is another floor ② 15-20 cm above ① but this may be merely a
